Final Part in a Series
Petition Calls Actions of Police Investigator, Judge Into Question

By Carlos Padilla
HERALD Reporter

Previous segments of this series focused on assertions made by the petitioner, Collin Reedy, regarding detailed accounts of the many alleged lapses in the state's case against him. These lapses include inconsistencies in the narrative used to convict him as well as opportunities to properly investigate these claims that the petitioner says his defense attorney apparently failed to discover and to bring to the petitioner's attention.

In this final installment, readers will be provided with information and assertions that illustrate issues of great concern in reference to the investigation.

A FALSE CONFESSION

In his petition, Reedy cites the multiple denials that he made during New Mexico State Police Officer Ray James' initial interrogation while investigating the alleged sexual assault for which Reedy is presently incarcerated. The document filed in Seventh Judicial District Court states that the audio recording from this interrogation either doesn't exist or could not be located despite the petitioner's efforts.

Officer James interrogated Reedy a second time at his father's home rather than take him to the police station, as is standard department protocol along with recording interrogations with audio and video equipment. Officer James apparently also failed to advise Mr. Reedy of his Miranda rights, or to inform the then-18-year-old that he was free to go at any time if he was not being officially detained.

The document goes on to state that Officer James led Reedy "through a series of leading questions and outright accusations." Also noted are the numerous denials made by Reedy in response, stating that he did not have sex with the 14-year-old girl. What began as direct denials, however, eventually became statements from Reedy that he didn't remember having sex with the girl, and then became a question of how he could work with the investigating officer. This was in response to what the petitioner characterizes as threats from Officer James of being sent to prison if Reedy didn't confess to the crime. This progresses until, according to the court document, Reedy asks Officer James how much time he would serve if he confessed to the crime, followed by Reedy stating that he "thinks" that he had sex with her, and then finally, breaking down and tearfully stating that he had sex with the girl.

The Writ of Habeas Corpus filed in Seventh Judicial District Court indicates that "[i]n this second interview, Officer

James uses the minimization and maximization techniques as taught by the Reid Interrogation Model that is used across the country in training police officers how to conduct interrogations and, more importantly, how to garner confessions."

The minimization technique refers to making the accused feel like their punishment will be kept to a minimum if they confess to the crime rather than making investigators spend a lot of time, effort and resources gathering evidence and conducting interviews in order to prove that the accused actually committed a crime.

For example, Officer James stated to Reedy, "Now is your time... to be completely honest. If something happened, then something happened. We can work with that."

At this point, according to court documents, the petitioner begins to move toward making a confession. Moments later, according to the petition, Officer James convinces Reedy to provide a false written statement.

In contrast, the maximization technique is utilized by an interrogator to make the accused feel like the punishment will be much worse if they don't cooperate with detectives by providing a confession.

LACK OF DNA OR ANY EVIDENCE

According to the petition, Officer James stated that he had other "things" that may discredit some of Reedy's version of events, including items submitted to the State Crime Lab that would likely tell him exactly what happened. Even after that, however, Reedy's statement at that time reminds Officer James that he didn't remember the events of that night due to his level of intoxication. The petition points out that Reedy's DNA was absent from the items submitted to the State Crime Lab, Officer James arrested him anyway.

During his interrogation of Reedy, Officer James continued to utilize the maximization technique, according to the court document, when he threatened the 18-year-old with a warrant to obtain his DNA. Reedy reportedly responded, "I don't know if anything happened with me or anything. I blacked out, so..."

At the time of the initial interrogation, Reedy submitted to a breathalyzer test that indicated his level of intoxication was above New Mexico's presumed level of intoxication, at 0.09 at 3:15 p.m., and presumed to be significantly higher when the alleged crime took place shortly after noon.

Officer James continues to press Reedy, however, because "things aren't quite matching up yet". The petition also cites studies and court decisions that cast doubt upon confessions garnered through coercion tactics like the Reid Interrogation Model, as they have resulted in numerous false confessions and – eventually – numerous overturned convictions.

Reedy's statements of not remembering anything seem to line up with his presumed level of intoxication (0.09) being more than four times that of the alleged victim (.02), however, Officer James presses Reedy to make a statement of confession when he stated "If you had sex with somebody, you're gonna know..." The petition points out that this directly contradicts Officer James' statements that the alleged victim is unable to remember having sex with Reedy due to her level of intoxication.

The petition points to more than 30 times that the alleged victim states that she doesn't remember having sex with Reedy, as well as that – despite there being no accusation from the victim that Reedy sexually assaulted her, and the Crime Lab results lacking any DNA evidence that matches Reedy's DNA – that he was still arrested, charged, and convicted based solely on the coerced false statement of confession.

The petition illustrates another questionable aspect. Officer James waited a full 10 days after the alleged victim went for a sexual assault exam in Las Cruces (Dec. 19, 2015) to interrogate Reedy a second time when he "garnered that coerced false confession" (Dec. 29, 2015), and asserts that if there were any credibility to the evidence gathered from the first interrogation or the SANE Exam, Reedy would have been questioned and arrested immediately rather than 10 days later.

Also, the petition reveals that Officer James never secured Reedy's vehicle for DNA evidence even after eliciting a confession from Reedy at his dad's house, with his car parked nearby, as well as the alleged victims pants or underwear despite questioning her at her home.

The petitioner states that, like Reedy's defense attorney, Officer James failed to interview six of the seven adults present during the time the alleged crime was supposed to be taking place, despite Reedy obtaining statements from four of the witnesses from the confines of prison.

Sierra Vista Hospital ER staff examined the alleged victim and stated that they "did not see any trauma," and "not to worry about it," which is also evidenced by the fact that ER staff did not notify police present in the ER at the time, or any time later, to
